CARDINAL
'02

Editorial

Kind readers, if you will follow us patiently, we will endeavor to show you a summary of the session of 1901-2, with fair, representative phases of college life. If you have occasion to laugh at any of our jokes, do it with a full heart. We expect criticism—all other great writers receive it—but if you have any very great fault to find, be calm. We do not mind being deficient, but it is having the fact told to us so often that hurts.

It is sincerely hoped that our volume will find a warm welcome in the hearts of all our readers; if, however, you are displeased, just call around at our private office, and we will gladly sell you another copy at the same price.

We wish to express publicly our thanks to the faculty, and the 1901 editors for the aid and interest they have given us, and our obligations to Messrs. McCrary, Streepey, and McMurtrie for their aid in illustrations for our Annual.

The University of Arkansas

In our sketch of the different departments of the University, we do not intend to give an extensive history, nor an exaggerated account. It is plain facts and typical student life, as an impartial observer sees it, that is endeavored to be portrayed. While we do not aspire to be classed above our rank, yet we will not suffer to be compared with the smaller colleges throughout the country, and take it, as a matter of course, that every one knows the great difference. The University is at the head of the public educational system of Arkansas, and is superior to most universities of the South and West. It offers to students of either sex free tuition, and endeavors to afford ample facilities for a thorough and practical education in literature, science, and the industrial arts, and for the professional studies.

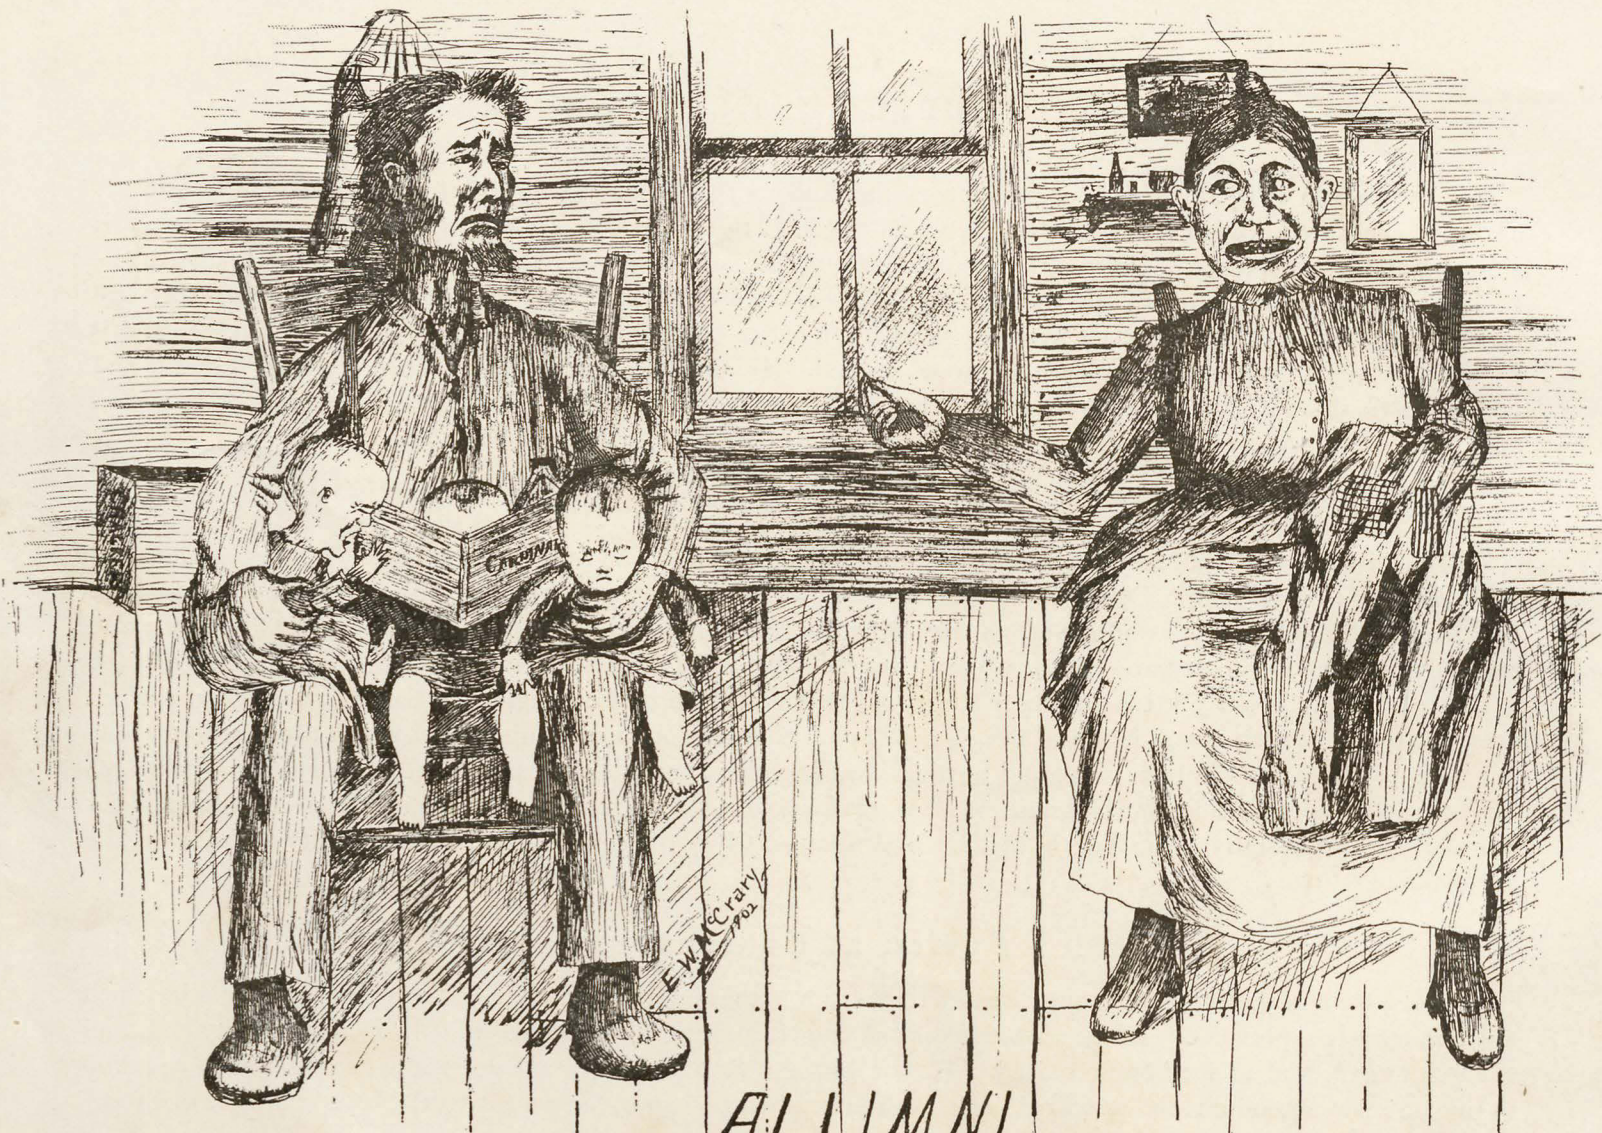

Situation

The University of Arkansas, except the Medical and Law Schools and the Branch Normal College, is located at Fayetteville, Washington County. It is in the Ozark Mountains more than 1,500 feet above the sea level. For healthfulness of climate and beauty of scenery it is surpassed by no other place in the State. The cool and refreshing mountain breezes are an incentive to school work. So refreshing, indeed, are they, especially to the students from the lower portion of the State, that the well known and contagious disease, spring fever, seldom ever enters our school, except now and then a case appears among our social animals, of which there are very few.

The great variety of agricultural and horticultural products, and the diversity of the country's surface makes this location especially adapted to scientific research. Fayetteville is strictly prohibition, and is unexcelled for morals. It is appropriately called the Athens of Arkansas, while the campus with its University buildings is the acropolis of Athens.

System of Government

The system of government is the same as that which is characteristic of our Southern Colleges—one in which the honor system prevails. When a student enters the University it is supposed that he came here to work, and is a gentleman, and as such he is treated. He is allowed liberal privileges in selecting a course, but is required to pursue it, to attend chapel, and drill. He is then at liberty to enjoy himself in athletics, social life, or in any manly way he chooses, provided he brings up his lessons and acts a gentleman.

ALUMNI

E. W. McCrary
1902

As a general rule the Faculty is quite congenial to the students. Some of them have been known to advise with Freshmen, something that is even below the dignity of a Senior. If it becomes necessary, on account of sickness, public speaking, etc., for a student to cut a class, he is allowed the privilege of making it up.

The Military Department

The University Military Department is under the supervision of the United States Government. The armory is supplied with three hundred Springfield cadet rifles, three hundred sets of infantry equipment, twenty-seven swords, national colors, flags, and signal equipment, all of the same model as those used at the United States Military Academy at West Point.

There are two battalions of three companies each, a field staff, and a band, all so well organized that a considerable interest (?) is taken in drill.

At the close of each school year there is a competitive drill among the companies, captains, non-commissioned officers, and privates. Prizes are awarded to the best drilled of each.

Athletics

During the past year great progress has been made in athletics. A park has been fenced and graded and a grand (?) stand erected. The greatest advancement over former years was probably made by our foot ball teams; next come the base ball and track teams. Students have taken a great interest in athletic sports this year; at one time there were sixteen applicants for one position on the base ball nine. Our foot ball eleven has been far superior to that of any preceding year; while they were not victorious in a great number of their games, still their opponents were high-class teams and those which our athletic predecessors would not think of playing. Two elevens that have been accustomed to match the 'Varsity First, flatly refused to play our second team. We had our first coach this year; the above facts have been the result; in addition there are flattering prospects for an excellent eleven next season. So great has been the advancement that we have been asked to join the Southern League. We have tasted, to a slight degree, fame; it has done us good, and never again shall we be without a coach supported by a strong college spirit.

The base ball and track teams are doing excellent work, have good material, and promise to excel their ancestors in a similar degree.

One of the most singular facts was that both elevens were excused from drill during a greater part of the season. The athletic association has been reorganized, and its possibilities are many.

We have not room enough to give a detailed argument on the mental and physical advantages of athletics, but would rather send such a document for instruction to the individual members of the General Assembly, to prepare for our next pull for an appropriation. (In the last Legislature a senator said he was not in favor of appropriating money for the museum—a place for the boys to use dumb-bells and Indian clubs. Let them get out and plow for exercise. Don't they need instruction?

The young ladies have an excellent gymnasium, well equipped with modern apparatus. Through the liberality of Miss Bowman, two classes of athletes have been allowed to use it under her direction. Yes! the boys have a "gym.," too, kept up by themselves, but we never take any special delight in showing it to visitors. But, after all, we feel almost assured that our next Legislature will give us a liberal appropriation. Still, an endowment from our alumni or from friends of the University will not be refused.

Student Life

As a general rule the student body represents the better class throughout the State, and it is this body, as well as the faculty, which helps to maintain a high-rated University. We do not like to make any distinction of students into clans or cliques, but rather regard them as a body, with noble ambitious, and characteristic good traits. Some good qualities are to be found in every student. Among as many as six hundred pupils some of every kind are found. Some come here because their fathers can not peacefully keep them at home. We are gratified to note, however, that they do not tarry long, but are kindly returned, or withdrawn to attend a business college or denominational school, where regulations can be dodged by money, and where "to flunk" is an entirely foreign phrase.

There is also the studious man who is hardly known outside of the school room. He thinks it his duty to "cram" and "bone" all the time and let the world wag as it will for other people. He very often makes an "E," and takes pleasure in being social enough (for once in life) to tell you of it, but if he is slipped up on on "Exam.," he just knows his teacher will be surprised at the paper he puts up; while on the other hand, if he should "flunk," he is ruined, blames his professor, has the blues for a week, and can not look another examination blank in the face for six months. He takes no interest in athletics, rather detests it, never sees either of our teams play and does not even know how our Thanksgiving game of foot ball comes out. The newspapers are not read by him, and he does not take enough interest in the State political campaign to bet pie on the election. This kind of student life breeds selfishness. There are, however, very few of this particular type. The other phase of student life is represented by the greatest number. The student who belongs to this class touches most nearly our ideal. He is a man with a true college spirit, helps support student publications and college organizations, belongs to the athletic association, and does all he can for the cause of athletics. He is the kind of fellow you want for a friend, and the man you like to talk to. It may become necessary for him to have fun every now and then, and you can't blame him for throwing a bag of water on a sweet little girl, or possibly, on a professor, when an extraordinarily good opportunity presents itself. We will allow him, also, to cut a class on pressing occasions (provided the occasions do not come too often). He is aware of the fact that association is half of a school boy's education. Very often, too, he may fall in love, but this is a characteristic of all of us (even of the Faculty), at one time or another. Life at college is one of the best places to judge a man's real character and merit, and we are pleased with what is found in our students. Our student body is one in which the moral and intellectual standards are very high, and one in which true worth, and not money, obtains for one his rank and favor with the student body.

Clubs and Organizations

There is a deep interest taken along this line by both departments and sexes. At present there are three permanent literary societies—The Garland, The Mathesian, and The Periclean. THE OZARK is published by these societies. The oratorical feature receives encouragement from faculty and students. The Cole medal contest is open to the members of The Garland for the greatest improvement in debate, and the Droke medal is awarded to the best declaimer of The Mathesian. The society halls are situated on the fourth floor of the main building, are carpeted, well lighted, seated, and furnished with libraries, pianos, tables, etc.

A deep interest is also taken in clubs by most of the collegiate students, yet there are some, as might be expected, who do not believe (?) in them. If it is the desire of a band of students of a particular turn to bind themselves into a closer relation and into a more intimate friendship with one another, no one should object. Selected and governed as our clubs are, they help to direct and discipline one's business and social qualities to higher ideals. At present there are six clubs carrying on an active existence—The Richardson Club, The Arkansas Club, The Success Club, The Triangle Club, The Has Been Club, and The Eclectics. In past years there have been a number of others, such as the S. U. N. Club, the Shakespearean Club, the Tenth Legion, etc., but in course of time each one hat durch gefallen.

Our Glee Club has not been thoroughly organized this year.

For the promotion of Scientific interest a Science Club, under the supervision of the professors of the different sciences, meets once every two weeks.

The New Anabasis

The Retreat of the Eighty-Nine

In September, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, a goodly band, eighty-nine in number, of the sons and daughters of Arkansas assembled at Fayetteville. They had completed the journey through the deserts of the Public Schools, fought their Cunaxa, and were now ready to begin the long and perilous march through the highlands of the University to the Sea.

The first country they entered was FRESHMAN. That is a wonderful county, full of dangers and marvels. In their first day's journey they found that its atmosphere was turning their countenances green. In the province of Chemistry and Physics they encountered a Chieftain who had great skill in obstructing the way and making it difficult to pass. Many were lost in this province. The Satrap of Mathematics also was a formidable opponent. His province is well fortified by nature and he was thoroughly acquainted with all its natural defences. By judiciously placing his forces he succeeded in crushing quite a number in the mountain gorges. His favorite weapon was the nine-point circle. In the land of Latin and Greek it was almost impossible to advance. Some stuck in the translation. Others fell down exhausted and were suffocated by paradigms and constructions. King Flunk was pressing hard upon them. At this crisis they found a friendly chief named Hinds and Noble who furnished them a heard of ponies. By means of these they were able to organize a cavalry company which proved to be very efficient in beating off the force of the great king.

When they reached the borders of SOPHOMORE only forty-eight were able to cross over and enter into that country. The passage through this land, too, was fraught with dangers. The atmosphere, however, was better and their complexions began to lose their green color. A new method of warfare was discovered which greatly accelerated their progress. It is called Working the Profs.

Twenty-eight of the veteran band made their way through Sophomore and entered the land of JUNIOR. There they erected a trophy and called it THE CARDINAL. Some Barbarians from a far country were employed in building this memorial. But the veterans treated them justly and paid them in full for all their work.

Twenty-four of the band entered SENIOR. In the heart of this country is a deep ravine strongly guarded by examinations. All who passed this defile were honored with a stately robe of black and a mortar board of the same color. When these first appeared in their distinguished apparel, certain small camp-followers from the land of Junior were sorely frightened. They could not see one another in the shadow of the dignity of the approved warriors. They were afraid they would be lost. So each one put on a loud garment of red and yellow and carried a lighted candle in his hand.

At last, after they had marched many weary stages, they learned that only a few parasangs lay between them and the Sea, the end of their journey together. They began to recount their experiences, their victories and their defeats. While they were thus reviewing the past a Barbarian Chief came into their camp and asked, "Who is the noblest of this valiant band? Who has performed most successfully the labors of your long journey?" And all answered, Dux femina facti.

Now the last day's journey is ended. The Sea for which they have longed and labored lies before them. The waves upon whose crests they have planned to ride are dashing at their feet, but they shrink from the chill of the first plunge.

ATHLETICS

E.F.M. Mudgett - '02

Athletics in the University of Arkansas

Do not be alarmed at the title of this little sketch and fear to read it lest you be worried with an exhortation to wake up and get some college spirit into you, to do something to help win victories for CARDINAL, to part with 39c of your well beloved coin, or take a few minutes each day from time given to novel reading, or to the praiseworthy effort to make the town of Fayetteville look busy by walking up and down its streets. Such a fear is entirely groundless.

The Editors of the CARDINAL realize only too well the fruitlessness of an endeavor to give energy to a drone, or patriotism to a selfish coxcomb, and then such an undertaking is entirely useless. Arkansas students realize the benefits of athletics, and the joys of a victory, or the sorrows of a defeat for alma mater just as well as any students in the world.

There may be some so little as to desire the defeat of a University team because they dislike some member of it, but they are very few in number, and usually outcasts, mere warts on the great loyal student body.

So we desire merely to make a few remarks about the rapid growth of athletics in the University during the past few years. That this growth has been rapid no one will deny. Only three or four years ago our football team was playing minor colleges (?) and high schools, and being defeated only too often. Gradually the standard was raised, the team became more ambitious, fewer insignificant elevens were played, more colleges, and in 1899 even a University. That year the eleven lost nearly all its important games, yet we all realized that it was a strong one, and that it was outclassed only in scientific training. A coach was longed for. Progress was being made. The next year no steps forward were taken. We played no University and even lost to our old enemy, Drury. But the bitterness of defeat brought with it no despair; the determination to win was stronger than ever. It gave us the team of 1901, the strongest in our history.

The growth of the baseball team has been even more remarkable. We never had a team until last year. We lost only two games the entire season and then by a close score. This year we seemed to find nothing but defeat; but some defeats are almost as good as victories. We played first-class teams and made an enviable record against them. Our few victories and many unlucky, and I may say undeserved, defeats have taught us several things; let us see what they are: One is that we must support our teams financially. Last year's football record clearly shows what training will do for Arkansas material. And we have no right to expect the faculty to do all, or the greater part, of such supporting. It is safe to say that in no other college in the world has a faculty done so much for a team as compared with the students. This year our faculty gave fully twice as much to the support of athletics as did the entire student body. All honor, and all praise and all thankfulness to our faculty, which takes the initiative in a work which it believes is for our good, and for the good of our University.

Another thing—we must support our team by our presence at their games and by our interest in them. We have always played better at home than away, because each player feels enthusiastic and confident; and full of the University spirit. Right here is the third thing our experience has taught us: There is in the U. of A. students a determination to win, which always comes to the front at the last critical moment. This was shown in all our football games; time was always called with the 'Varsity making headway towards her opponent's goal. The same has been true of our baseball teams. Let us foster the hope that we will win out at the very last; and make our opponents fear the University finish.

The Garland Literary Society

This Society was founded in 1886 by a number of young men from the Preparatory Department of the University. They were in earnest in all their efforts, and used all laudable means by which they could cultivate those attainments that an organization of this kind affords. The Garland was named in honor of Hon. Augustus H. Garland, one of Arkansas' most honored statesmen. It has always been the aim of its members to cultivate a spirit and make improvement that would make it worthy of that illustrious name.

The early paths of this Society were not all strewn with flowers, but there has been a steady and stable growth. In 1897 the membership had become so large that it was necessary to obtain a more commodious apartment than a recitation room, and it now occupies a spacious hall on the fourth floor of the University building. The Society has continued to advance, and this has been well shown by the parts played by its members in all public programs, and especially the Commencement program in 1901.

Through the generosity of Prof. G. A. Cole, a gold medal is given each year to the member who makes the greatest improvement in debate. The Garlanders are proud of the fact that they have always had the hearty support of our honored Faculty and our beloved President. The honorary members in the faculty have used every opportunity to aid the Society, and their well timed advice has done much towards placing the Society on the highway to success. Among its members are found representatives from every class in the University. The Garland has a good record. Five of the graduates of 1901 were its members, and it is meeting with splendid success in 1902. May its members forever prosper, and its motto, "Nulla Vastigia Retrosa—no steps backward," forever stand.

The Mathetian Literary Society

The Mathetian Literary Society was founded November 5, 1873. Much uncertainty exists about its origin, but the most acceptable theory is that it was organized by eleven members of the Clarosophic Society. The aim of the Mathetian may be inferred from the following preamble to its constitution: "We, the undersigned, declare ourselves an association for mental improvement, and, in the pursuit of this object we desire at all times to exhibit a due consideration for the opinions and feelings of others, to maintain a perfect command of temper in all our intercourse, to seek for truth in all our exercises."

Since that time the Mathetian Society has had several conflicts, beginning with a contest between the Board of Trustees and itself as to the time of meeting. Since its organization the Society had been meeting on Friday evening, but the Board decided that it was not proper to meet then. The time of meeting was changed to Saturday morning, then to Friday afternoon, and so it has remained.

The Society was first organized for young men only, but afterwards young ladies were admitted. Indeed, at one time it consisted wholly of young ladies; but the young men soon came back and since then Fortune has smiled on the Society.

Several teachers of the University have been Mathetians. Among these are Prof. G. W. Droke, Miss Ella Carnall, deceased, Miss Naomi Williams, and Mrs. Purdue. The most distinguished among our former members are John N. Tillman, Circuit Judge, Carrol D. Wood, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Arkansas.

With such a record in the past and such auspicious prospects for the future, has not the Mathetian Society won its motto—"Facto probent meritum?"

The Periclean Literary Society

On the 20th of October, 1900, a small band of young men of the University of Arkansas met in the room of one of the students and organized themselves into a Literary Club, having for its object the mutual development of its members in literary work, the engendering of a philanthropic and harmonious spirit among the students, and the cultivation of a conservative and non-partisan feeling in the University.

The Club carried out regular weekly programs, consisting of debates, orations, speeches, essays, and general literary work. New names were added to the roll from time to time.

The work of the Club proved to be effective and the members showed much enthusiasm in carrying out the principles of the organization.

It now became necessary to secure a more commodious place in which to hold the meetings of the Club. Permission to use room No. 34 on the third floor was secured from the President of the University, and the first meeting in the University building was held on January 4, 1901.

The Club thinking it could accomplish more by becoming a recognized society on equal footing with the other literary societies, petitioned the Faculty for recognition March 6, 1901. The Society, having been recognized by the Faculty March 29, 1901, was duly organized under the name of Periclean Literary Society.

The Society in its evolution from the Club retains the early purpose and principles of the latter, and the present members believing these to be noble and worthy of perpetuation earnestly entreat their successors to cherish and protect these principles.

The Society wishes to maintain a generous rivalry between the various societies; but at no time has it nourished a hostile spirit toward any. It shall ever strive to cultivate the sentiment set forth in the following motto: "Tros Tyrinsque mihi nulls discrimine agetur—I make no distinction between classes."

IN HISTORY CLASS.

Prof.—“Mr. Baxter, you may tell me of the principal events in the life of Arnold of Brescia.”

Baxter—“Chews the rag” for half an hour and does not touch the topic.

Prof.—“Well, Mr. Taylor, tell me of Arnold of Brescia.”

Baxter—“Why! Professor, I thought you asked me about—”

Prof.—“I did, but didn’t get anything.”

IN PHYSICS I.

Dr. Menke—“Now, young gentlemen, the sun is the great source of heat, but is gradually cooling and in infinity it will be very cold.”

Jones—(To classmate.) “It won’t be cold for everybody.”

Dr. Menke—“Well, Mr. Jones, we were not speaking of you.”

First Pupil—“Say, Old Pal, how do you like Miss —?”

Second Pupil—“Oh, I don’t know, but judging from her looks, she’ll never break Reg. 50.”

IN ECONOMICS III, BANKING.

Dr. McLean—“Mr. Brewster, was the Bank of France paying specie on its notes at this time?”

Brewster—“It was the last time I heard about it.”

IN SUB. HISTORY.

Mrs. Cole—“Mr. Gerrald, what was the greatest disaster of the Augustan Age?”

Gerrald—(Promptly.) “The birth of Christ.”

JANUARY 17, FRESHMAN CLASS MEETING.

First Fresh—(On meeting one of his classmates coming from the University)—“Say! Where are you going? Ain’t you going to class meeting?”

Second Fresh—“Naw! I’m busted.

OCTOBER 5, CHEM. I.

Dr. Menke—“What is the formula for steam?” (The question passes most of the class, but soon Ross throws up his hand.)—“Well, Mr. Ross, you may tell us.”

Ross—(Quickly.) “St.”

“MATH.” CLASS.

Prof. Droke—“Mr. Curry, can you give me Article 360?”

Curry—“I know professor, but I ca—n—t exactly tell you.”

Prof.—Oh! it’s a secret, is it?”

Two students meet Dr. Carr coming from town carrying some books. First Student—“Look what a load of books Dr. Carr has.”

Second Student—“Yes, a regular Carr-load.”

Prof. Cole—"Now, Mr. Finley, if I ever catch you studying I will have to report you."

FEBRUARY 13, PHYSICS I. EXAMINATION.

On the fly leaf of a students exam. blank—"Dedicated to Dr. A. E. Menke, with all due appologies to Mr. Long-fellow:"

"Tell me now in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream;
The boy was flunked that slumbered
And Physics Exam. was not what it seemed."

Williard Baxter—Specialty, self in general.
Paul Streepy—Specialty, Hot Springs.

GELETT BURGESS IN THE U. OF A.

Carl Smith's remarks on social life,
We fear he ne'er will get a wife.

There is little in afternoon tea
To appeal to a person like me,
Polite conversation evokes the elation
A cow might enjoy in a tree.

Alfred Wasson was meek and mild;
He softly spoke, he sweetly smiled,
He never called his playmates names,
And he was good in running games,
*But he was often in disgrace—
Because he had a dirty face.*

The Lecture, a slight divagation,
Concerning Beakley's ambulation.

I love to go to concerts,
And make the people stare
By walking miles behind my love,
With quite a lordly air.

The reveries of Baxter, strange vagaries,
Inspired, they say, by his coal-hearted Lares.

My fancies like the flame aspire,
I dream of Fame and Fate;
I see my future in the fire,
And, Oh! it's simply great!

Ad Almam Matrem

Mother of thought, to thee all eyes should turn;
For thee with holy zeal all hearts should burn,
 Throughout the borders of our commonwealth.
From where the Southern cypress bows her head
O'er mighty streams and marshes vast and dead,
 To where the mountains laugh with light and health.

From where the billows of the cotton bend
To Southern winds and where the cornfields lend
 Their emerald hue to many a spreading plain;
To where the berry blushes on the hill
And purpling vines the air with fragrance fill
 And golden fruits flash back the sun again.

And so thou art the great epitome
Of all the full and perfect life should be;
 The life alike in thought and action great.
And when thy sons their varied forces blend
And strive together to that common end,
 Through thee, we yet may frame the perfect state.

Ah, may this dawning light of coming years
Light up new throngs who come with hopes and fears
 To seek the treasures that are found in thee—
The band more skilled for every work and art,
The strengthened mind, the deepened, softened heart
 From every sordid taint of baseness free.

In thee, the searcher in the world of mind,
Who lifts his thoughts to regions unconfined
 Of time and space, who seeks the true, the just,
May meet with him who bends unto his will
Each stubborn force, unlocks the iron hill,
 Unseals the hidden treasures of the dust.

THE OFFICIAL FOOLS OF JUNIOR CLASS.

Old Dorsey

Old Dorsey was of a dusky color, with short, kinky, dark hair, mixed with many locks of gray. He was of small stature and was what is usually called a Guinea negro. This old fellow was especially fond of whiskey and would do almost anything to get it.

One day last Summer, about dark, I was going into our back gate when I heard the squawk of a chicken. I ran in the direction of the noise, so as to catch the thief. As I came up, the chickens were running in every direction, as if a hawk had lighted in their midst. I chanced to catch a glimpse of the dark figure of a man retreating behind some fig bushes. I called to him to come out, threatening to shoot if he did not, although I didn't have a sign of firearms with me. At the word "shoot" an old negro, whom I recognized as old Dorsey, came out. I asked what he meant by stealing, and he answered in a stammering sort of way:

"Boss, wan't gwine to steal no chickens. I'se jes fixin' to take dem offen de fence an' carry dem into de chicken house."

"Dorsey," I said, "I know better than that; you were going to sell them to get whiskey." Then he, thinking it useless to continue lying, said:

"You'se right, boss; I wuz gwine to do dat berry same thing, for I'se so thirsty I don't know what I'se gwine to do widout it."

As his tone was so pitiful and as I saw tears rolling down his cheeks, I said:

"Dorsey, if you'll promise me you won't steal a chicken for two months, I'll give you enough money to buy a half gallon."

"Yas, suh," said he, "I'll promise dat, an' bless yo' life, I'se gwine to keep dat promise."

I handed him the money and turned to go when he said:

"Jes a minit, boss; please don' tell anybody 'bout dis; 'cause if yo' do, it'll ruin me wid de church."

"All right," I said, "I'll promise you that, so long as you keep your promise to me."

"Thankee, thankee," he said, bowing his old gray head, "I'll sho' do dat."

I then turned and went into the house. About a half an hour later I heard, again, the squawk of a chicken. I was almost sure it was the old man and that he had forgotten his promise. An idea struck me,—I could scare him nearly to death by firing a gun into the air. Snatching the gun from the corner, I opened the blinds. Scarcely had I done this when old Dorsey yelled out:

"Please, suh, don' shoot dis time; I'se jes' bringin' back de chickens I took las' night."

I did not carry out my plan, but hurried out into the yard, only to find nobody there. I was very much taken aback and said to myself: "There will come a time some day." Alas! the time never came, for Dorsey had, in running from our yard to his home, tried to cross a very deep stream by means of a log which could not withstand the old negro's weight and which gave way when he had reached the middle of the stream. Being so badly frightened and not a good swimmer at his best, he was unable to keep himself above the water. Next morning his body was found washed ashore. On his face was a peaceful smile and his half parted lips seemed to say: "I'se gwine to keep dat promise."

ABNER MCGHEE, JR.

Progress in the University of Arkansas

Now, it came to pass, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and two, at that abode of learning which is called the University, in the land of Arkansas, that there appeared divers and manifest signs of great, yea, of exceeding great growth in learning, and in diligence, and in righteousness, and in brotherly love, and in other excellent virtues.

For did not the youth of that abode of learning, even the goodly and faithful youth, begin to say one unto another: "Have we not been true and diligent readers and scholars ever since we have abode in this place? And now are we become better than ever before." And the young men and also the virgins spake these things; and it was even so.

For it came to pass that now neither they, nor their teachers that went among them, had any longer to go into that dismal place which is called Chapel; but they might remain without the walls and take their rest, as it was not given to their fathers to do.

And moreover, when they did enter within the doors of the place, it was allowed some to appear in bright and shining garments of crimson, and of topaz, and of divers other colors, and their countenances shone and they were fair to behold. And the doors of the chamber were opened wide unto them, and the eyes of all the people were fixed upon them.

But there came after these some that were clad in black, with sorrowful faces, and all the people turned their eyes away from these and gazed not upon them.

But we know that in that place they all said one unto another: "Let us sing the songs of our fathers. Beware, lest we be taken in by new and false melodies, which make the heart to be merry."

And when prayer was made, some arose; but others kept their seats and read and conversed as it seemed good unto them. And they might enter that chamber or arise and go hence when it pleased them.

Now, likewise, no longer need the youth visit those places called Lecture Rooms; but if, perchance, it pleased any one, he might go and sit at the feet of them that gave instruction. And there was also a report abroad in the land that two or three went to those places faithfully day by day.

It was allowed the maidens to talk with the young men and to converse. So it came to pass that, not many days after, one of the damsels, and the two that were with her, had their names writ in large letters upon a scroll of white, which is called in that place the Bulletin Board.

The young men of the place made sport in the fields, yea, even within the walls of their dwelling. And they trained their bodies and waxed exceeding strong and performed great feats of strength; so that they who sat below among the books marveled and quaked with fear, for it seemed that the walls would fall upon them.

The damsels, also, were trained and grew in skill, and in strength, and in comeliness.

And all the people of the land and of the regions round about marveled at these things and some were sore afraid for the might and the power of them who dwelt in that place.

And they spake much within themselves and said one to another: "What think ye of all this that we see? Call ye not it by the name of Progress?"

A DAMSEL.

Fancies

Fancies dim and real and fleeting
Happ'nings olden are repeating,
Crowding mem'ry's moving scene
With a ghostly, glamored sheen.

Sadd'ning mem'ries never dying,
From the opened tomb are flying;
And they strike and move the soul,
As a dirge's solemn roll.

Onward, past me they are flitting,
All in place and time are fitting;
Some are stained with childish tears,
Others, joys of youthful years.

Olden pleasures onward flowing,
Like the Southern breezes blowing,
Bring a mournful rest and calm,
And the shrouded past embalm.

But all this is fancy's dreaming,
And the visions sweet and streaming
Waver, stop, and flit away,
While the misty shadows play.
